

THE WHIG STANDARD.

From the Knickerbocker.

"How many a bereaved father, as he nightly gazes about him his little flock, can respond to the touching pathos of the following lines. One we know, an afflicted contemporary, who sees but little in this world beyond his motherless babes to win his affections from another and a better, unto which his beloved partner has lately gone before him, who, as he pursues this sad picture of domestic sorrow, will feel it in his heart of hearts."

You're weary, precious ones! your eyes
Are wandering far and wide;
Think ye of her who knew so well
Your tender thought to guide;

Who could to wisdom's sacred lore
Your fixed attention claim?
Ah! never from your hearts erase
That blessed mother's name!

'Tis time to sing your evening hymn,
My youngest infant dove;
Come, press thy velvet cheek to mine,
And learn the lay of love:

My sheltering arms can clasp you all,
My foot deserted throng!
Cling as you used to cling to her
Who sings the angels' song.

Begin, sweet birds, the accustomed strain,
Come, warble loud and clear;
Alas! alas! you're weeping all—
You're sobbing in my ear!

Good night! go say the prayer she taught
Beside your little bed;
The lips that used to bless you there
Are silent with the dead!

A father's hand your course may guide
Amid the thorns of life—
His care protect those shrinking plants
That tread the storms of strife;

But who upon your infant hearts
Shall look that mother write?
Who touch the strings that rule the soul?
Dear smitten flock, good night!

SPORTING LETTERS FROM THE FAR WEST.

After the incidents detailed in my last letter, relative to the danger of precipitately wearing deerskin clothing, our party travelled several days across the country fairly badly. We had little or nothing to eat or drink, our mules were fagged out, and it was determined that when we arrived at a convenient halting place, that we would rest for some days. Coming to the banks of a running stream, which were about ten feet high, it was thought a favorable place for encampment, and in a few hours we were fixed in a manner perfectly agreeable. We made our tents by driving long poles into the banks, and resting on them forked sticks, then covering this frame with buffalo skins. About midnight of the second day, we were aroused by a whoop and a volley of shot and arrows; the balls did no damage, but the arrows as they came striking half way through the skins, looked rather frightful. Sir William rushed out and gave the enemy a broadside in Scotch; they retreated a few paces and talked in Indian. A parley ensued, when it appeared that a roving party of Kansas had mistaken our tents for those of their enemies—the Crow Feet—as this latter tribe are called "Prairie Dogs" because they lie in the sand hills. The mistake was very natural, but as the party was small, and as some observed only Indians, they were severely thrashed, to learn them better in future. The Indians were very submissive, and seemed sorry for what they had done. The night following this adventure we lost three horses, a chain, and a pistol; no doubt this is the way they took satisfaction for the injuries they had received from our party.

It is needless to say that our party was pretty sick of the Far West sport. Audubon had already packed up to return to the civilized haunts of mankind. We knew this from the fact that every thing was secured with a lock and key that could be, to keep them from being stolen—a precaution generally unnecessary in savage life. Taking advantage of our resting place, we resolved upon having a good dinner, and perhaps the dishes may not be uninteresting to our readers. We had the breast of a wild turkey boiled as dry as a chip, which we used as bread; buffalo marrow for butter; bear ribs for pork; and prairie grouse christened chicken. To give the thing more the air of civilization, we all sat up bold, and in unnatural positions; and to make it still more "white folks fashion," we did not grease our faces in eating above our nose, and only used one hand when it was possible. Toasts were drunk—one of which I have preserved. By —: "The Far West—great country—like small pox, it need only be gone through once to answer every useful purpose"—in silence. By —: "Our sport out here—like interesting Indians—all in my eye"—also in silence. By an old hunter: "The great diggins between the Yellow Stone and the mouth of the Columbia—the only field on which a smart white man can display his abilities." Great applause from Tar-pot-wan-ja. By myself: "The Indian hunting grounds—like the Indians themselves, more interesting in ladies' books than any where else." Three brays from one of the wagon mules. By Sir William: "Out here, as much ahead of fiction, as a sterling pound is worth more than a Scotch." Old Lang Syne whistled by the party. By Tar-pot-wan-ja: "Hoke-poke bumbug ocken-wocken-khantumit ex sho;" which, literally translated, means, "white man worth nothing after the whiskey is gone."

The night following the dinner was exceedingly pleasant, until about midnight, when the wind rose, and, from a severe blow, turned into a hurricane; for a while it passed over us, the bank of the stream keeping it off; but after a while it chopped round, and blew directly down the river; and the rain also fell and put out our fires. The stream by which we were encamped, called by the Indians "Shallahville," from its great depth, rose rapidly; and, lastly, to complete our difficulty, our tents blew over, our wagons were knocked down, our arms upset, sending the charge of two barrels of buckshot among us by exploding the caps.

The morning dawned, and presented the worst looking set of fellows that ever appeared in these parts, and that is saying a great deal, when you reflect that the Indians live out here. After hunting about, we found that we had saved most of our property, as nothing had floated off but a copper kettle and a box containing some old horse shoes and a broken wagon tire. Sir William was anxious to obtain them, and commissioned Tar-pot-wan-ja and myself to take canoes and go after them.

To do anything was a relief; so, following the example of the Indian, I jumped into a canoe, took my seat in its bottom, and one stroke of my paddle sent me into the middle of the stream; the next instant I was balancing from side to side with a rapidity of motion that upset my stomach, and would have upset me had I not fallen into the bottom of the canoe. My gyrations afforded the spectators more amusement than it did me, and as I floated off, they wished me a pleasant trip. I started up to reply, when I found that the least motion on my part destroyed the equilibrium of the canoe, and gave it a turn-over motion truly alarming; in fact, I had to keep my paddle perfectly erect like a mast, for fear it would tumble me over, and, as I concluded I should be drowned, I thought it was a jury mast erected over my remains. Down the stream I went, my feet close together, hardly daring to wink, when an eddy drew my frail barque—it was a bark canoe—into a sort of bay, striking it against a log and turning me into the water as if I had been so much lead. I rose to the surface and snorted like a porpoise, seized hold of the tree, and flattered myself with the hope that I was born to be hung.

A little exertion on my part got me safe ashore, and I found myself about a half a mile below our encampment, and on the opposite side of the stream. I walked back, and found Tar-pot-wan-ja had already returned. With great difficulty I got across the stream, nearly drowned, and a good deal sick, concluding that I was the most unfortunate man of the party. After a few days' hard work we got things together again, and took trail leading towards the cross timbers, where it is said if the Blackfeet Indians are not already in possession of them, and the wild turkeys do not taste too strong of turpentine from living on pine burs, we shall have some rest and enjoyment.

Love of Home.—The Irish are often ridiculed, or contemned, for vaunting the comfortable homes they have left behind them. "The Almighty knows," they say, "what we've come here for, we were a dale better off at home!" This is false in word, but true in feeling. Their earnest affections take possession of their memories, and efface all but that which made the happiness of their birth-place, and childhood's home. There, in perpetual freshness, are the joys of youth; the associations of song and story are there; there, in golden light, all the bright passages of life—its pleasant acquaintanceships, and sparkling incidents. And there, those ministers of suffering, trial, superstition, even death itself, have their root of sorrow plucked out, and become ministering angels, messengers from another world! Who ever looked back upon home, through the vista of time, or the wide spaces of distance, and saw anything but light and beauty there? Surely, then, the poor Irish may be pardoned the hallucinations of their final love.—Mrs. Sigourney.

Love and Reconciliation.—It is a glorious thing—and there are those who truly know how glorious it is—after moments of misunderstanding, even of reciprocal transgression, to rest again heart to heart; and to feel, deeply feel that there is a certainty in the world, in spite of all the powers of hell, a certainty, which is heaven upon earth—that they love each other, that they belong to each other, that nothing in the world will separate them, who have again found each other in earnest, in true and perfect love. O! this is a certainty the most beautiful of all things on earth—a certainty which is the foundation and security for every other. He felt it truly, the man who, when about to leave the stage of life, laid his hand upon his breast and said—"I love, therefore, I am immortal!"—Pittsburgh Sun.

Coming to the Work.—The Troy Whig of Monday makes the following gratifying announcement:

"A Stump Association.—We are gratified to learn that an association, composed of the most eminent Whig orators in the State, will be formed early next spring, for the purpose of addressing the people in every county, previous to the Presidential election. They will take the field as soon as deemed expedient after the nominations are made by the National Convention, and keep it until the day of election. It is their determination to carry on the war in New York in the same manner that Gov. Jones and his gallant allies carried it on last summer in Tennessee; and they will be happy to meet their opponents face to face, and discuss with them the great questions of public policy which are to be decided by the next Presidential election."

John Tyler's opinion of Henry Clay.—At a Whig dinner at Washington, a short time after the nomination of Harrison and Tyler by the Harrisburg Convention, Mr. Tyler said:

"I do declare, in the presence of my Heavenly Judge, that the nomination given to me was neither solicited nor expected; I went to the Convention in honor of Henry Clay; and in the defeat of the wishes of his friends, I, as one of them, made a sacrifice of feeling, even though my own name was associated with that of Harrison. * * * I am a true and genuine Whig, and in the Capitol yonder, I have shown my love of Whig principles."

Notwithstanding the above, this same Tyler, in an evil hour, basely deserted both Mr. Clay and his party, went over to the Locos, who, having used him to his ruin, spurned him from their presence; and he is now left with a miserable few who embraced him for "the spoils of office." He and they will soon meet their doom.—Baltimore Patriot.

Brief enough.—"Hollo, mister," said a Yankee to a teamster, who appeared in something of a hurry, "what time is it? Where are you going? How deep is the creek? And what is the price of butter?"

The Croton Aqueduct.—The New York Commercial says: "Portions of this, our city's greatest and most pride-justifying work, have been undergoing for some time past their annual process of examination; and it is gratifying to know that so far not the slightest crack or crevice or defect of any kind, has been discovered. To use the expression of our informant, no where has been found an opening large enough to admit the blade of a penknife."

Messrs. Watchman & Bratt, of the city of Baltimore, have just constructed an immense diving bell. The Patriot states that the dimensions of this submarine dwelling are six feet in height and the same in diameter, tapering at the top somewhat in form of a sugar loaf. It is constructed of boiler iron, three-eighths of an inch in thickness, bound round with large iron hoops, and substantially riveted. There are four windows in the side and six on the top, to be set with ground glass, for the purpose of admitting light. On the top is to be placed a kind of regulator, designed to balance the larger bell when immersed. A large hollow cylinder, to be charged with highly condensed atmospheric air for breathing, is also attached. The contents of this are communicated to the occupants by means of a leatheren pipe.

India Rubber.—Few have a proper estimate of the value of this useful article. At the Springfield factory, mail bags for the Post Office Department, hammocks and buckets for the national ships, and cartridge cases for naval use, are manufactured out of India Rubber. One of these hammocks will contain a sailor's clothes, and in case of shipwreck, will serve as a "life preserver" in water. The cartridge cases, when filled with powder, are air tight, and preserve the contents from accidental fire or sparks, and from water or dampness. Great quantities of these articles are making for the Government.—N. Y. Sun.

SUPERIOR to any other kind in use, constructed in accordance with the philosophy of Nature, in the peculiar form of a CONCAVO-CONVEX ELLIPSE; admirably adapted to the organs of Sight, and perfectly natural to the Eye; affording altogether the best artificial help to the human vision ever invented. They are manufactured only by H. M. PAINE & Co., Massachusetts, and can be obtained in this city of

The Perifocal Glasses can be used for the greatest length of time, either by day or night, with perfect ease, (when selected to suit the state of the eye,) and never cause that giddiness of the head, or unpleasant sensation to the eyes, that many experience from using the common kind, but tend to strengthen and improve the sight; as will be seen by the numerous testimonials from those who have used them, which can be examined by calling as above. Perifocal Glasses put into other spectacle frames.

N. B. All persons not satisfied with these Glasses after making trial of them, are particularly requested to have them exchanged until suited.

It has been their object, in the selection of goods the present season, not only to please all tastes, by presenting a splendid variety, but also to convince all who are disposed to test the matter, that they can be furnished with clothing at a regular establishment in Washington as cheaply as at a store or by going abroad; it will therefore afford us pleasure to illustrate these facts either by direct or indirect comparison.

WHEN WILL THE PUBLIC CEASE TO BE HUMBUGGED?—P. W. BROWNING, Merchant Tailor, in opposition to all humbuggers, most respectfully requests members of Congress and strangers visiting the city, not to purchase their clothing before calling to examine his large and superior stock of French and English Cloths, Cassimeres, and Vestings of the latest styles; as he is prepared to prove to them, that he is selling the same article of clothing from 20 to 25 per cent. cheaper than certain dry goods storekeepers that wish to take the trade out of the tailors' hands by holding out false pretences to the public, that they are selling suits of clothes from $10 to $20 cheaper than they can be purchased elsewhere. I want to know how it is possible for any set of men that have no practical knowledge of the business, to sell clothes cheaper than practical tailors—men that know no more about making coats than they know about laying brick—notwithstanding all their arrangements with the celebrated tailors to cut and make their clothes, and their great facilities for buying goods, unless they have a facility for buying without paying for them? I am determined to undersell them, and not to sacrifice my trade to such an avaricious set of men until the last dollar is gone! All I ask is for you to call and examine for yourselves.
